

SANS 2020 Risk-Based Vulnerability Survey

Author: David Hazar | Date: November 2020

Vulnerability management has been evolving over the past several years to tie more closely with security and risk management, based on previous SANS surveys. As an extension of our 2019 survey, this new survey will focus less on how organizations are identifying vulnerabilities, and more on how they are analyzing and treating the vulnerabilities they identify. Questions will look into how organizations are leveraging risk factors to perform risk-based vulnerability management, and how they are identifying and responding to obstacles that are preventing organizations from fixing certain vulnerabilities.

The survey will address key issues related to risk-based vulnerability management, such as:

- What risk factors are most important to vulnerability management?
- What classes of vulnerabilities are most difficult to address?
- What are the major impediments to successful treatment of vulnerabilities?
- How are exclusions or exceptions granted and tracked, and who has visibility into current exclusions or exceptions?
- What measures and metrics are most valuable in influencing the right behaviors?
- What risk criteria are being leveraged to generate meaningful risk-based reports?
- What reporting tools and techniques are most valuable?
